

Four Tier Self-Watering Tomato Tower

For correct usage, please read these instructions carefully before first use and store in a safe place for future reference.

Description of parts

Assembly

Ensure that all parts are present before assembly.

To assemble the planter, simply connect the four sides together and make sure they are secure.

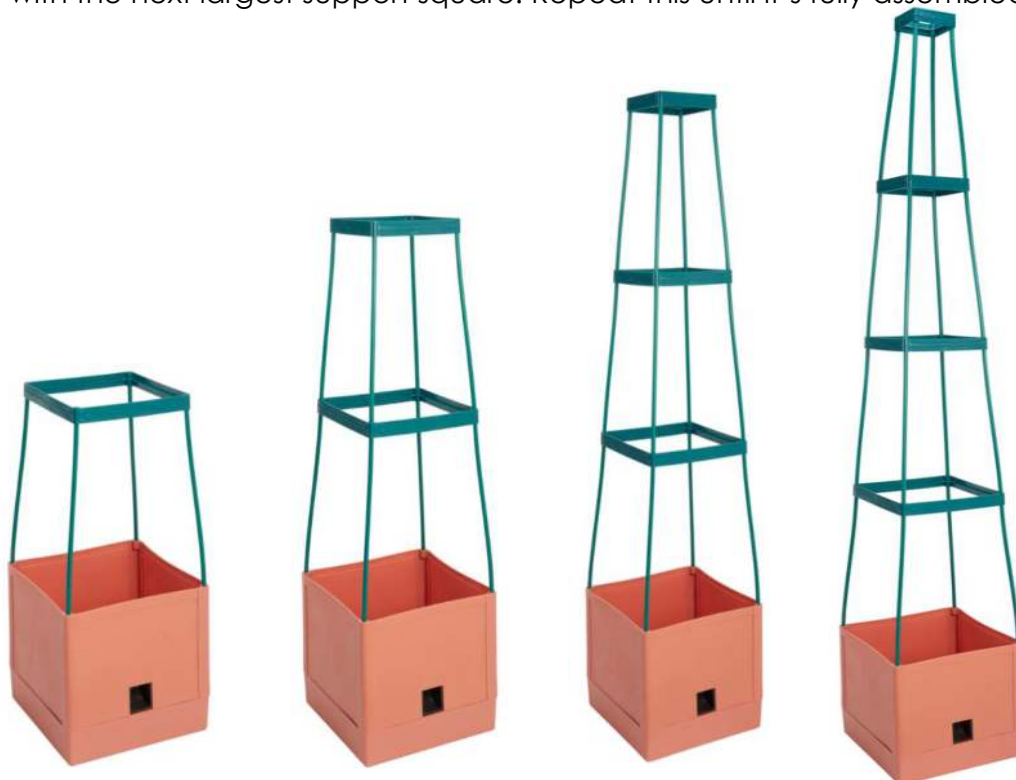

Secure in place on the base of the planter, making sure that each side has clicked securely into position.

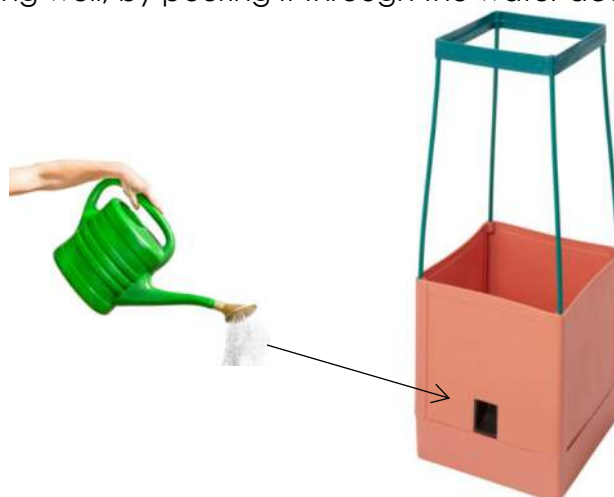

Insert the divider base so it lies flat. Add the small water well hood inside by the water access point, this will allow water to fill the well at the base and prevent compost from spilling out of the hole.

Once the planter is assembled, insert the four sticks, one into each corner of the planter.

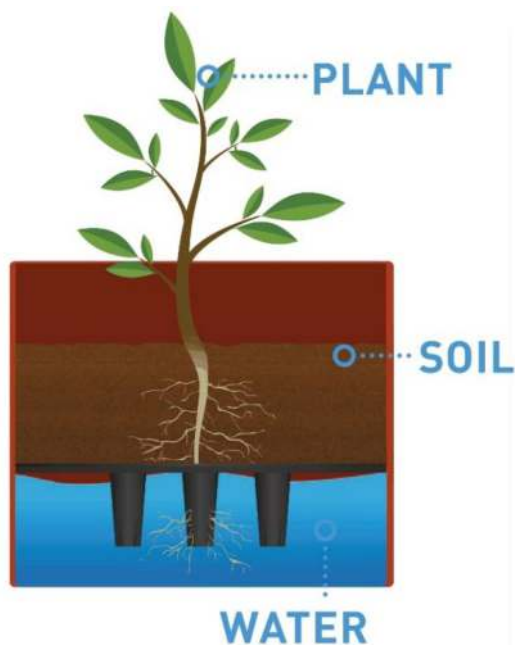

Secure it with the largest support square, insert four more sticks into the square, and secure with the next largest support square. Repeat this until it's fully assembled.

Fill the planter with compost above the divider base, add your desired plants and add water into the well. Any further watering may be done by simply adding water to the self-watering well, by pouring it through the water access point.

The planter is designed so that your plants can take as much or as little water as they need at any given time. The divider is designed to hold water underneath it and compost on top, it has funnels that sit in the water. The roots then grow down into the funnels and feed from the water when they require.

After initial planting, you will need to water the compost from above to keep roots moist until they have grown long enough to reach the water reservoir below. At this point simply keep the reservoir topped up to keep your tomato plants thriving. Once the first flowers have set, add liquid fertiliser to the water reservoir to encourage the best growth and cropping from your plants.
